

The Wombats is bringing their new album to Budapest Essentials

New names added to the line up of the Hungarian capital's own urban festival

The Wombats, just right after releasing their third album this week, moreover 2014's emerging house sensation Duke Dumont, nevertheless the Budapest-fanatic Astronautalis: these are the new additions to Budapest Essentials urban festival, following La Roux, Solomun and Katy B all announced earlier this month. If that is not enough to excite anyone who travels to the Hungarian capital in late June, let us tell you something else: the festival will take place on multiple locations all around the city. The main stage will be situated on no other, but the majestic Margaret Island. Between 25 and 28 June popular downtown clubs, plenty of World Heritage Sites will host parties of many genres – we promise to introduce all locations within the upcoming weeks. The urban festival, which returns for the second time this year, does not only offer programmes for evening hours, but ticket holders can get a unique glimpse of the vivid culture, and a fresh taste of the upcoming gastronomy scene of city. Festival wristband – just like last year – gives them discounts in several museums, bars, cafes and restaurants, not to mention, that it will get them into one of the (selected) historical spas for free as well.

On the last weekend of June The Wombats will present their latest album for one of the first time ever. The New York based band released its third album in April, Glitterbug, which has been long-awaited by critics and fans alike. On this very special evening, those who will be there, will meet the kings of contemporary artistic pop, while they present their unique and personally melancholic, yet uplifting post-new wave beats.

Duke Dumont represents the very elite of the current UK club music scene: he makes millions dancing all over the world. Budapest Essentials urban festival is going to be one the signature events of his tour this year, and we bet that apart from the I Got U, which get him a Grammy nomination, the well-known Need U or Won't Look Back will also be part of his set.

Astronautalis cannot miss Budapest Essentials either: according to his own correspondence, he fell in love with the city years ago. Charles Andrew Bothwell, whose stagename stands for him and his fellow performing artists as a group too, is a traditional DIY musician, who focuses on granulated rhythms paired with rhythmic chanting, the latter he considers to be the most important ingredient of the urban lifestyle of our time.

In addition to Carl Craig, Budapest Essentials tends to please fans of the more heavier beats. Answer Code Request brings the darkest and deepest arena techno from Berlin and proves that faster rhythms of the '90s fits well to the perfectionist modern sounds of our time's German techno. Romania's very own Cosmin TRG became a household name in the international underground electronic music scene in the last few years. His universal rhythms and perfect balance, both marking his sets, will serve and excellent soundtrack for the daze lasting till dawn.

Eskmo is back with a new album after five long years, and he is also back to Budapest to showcase it. Eskmo's new album is a monumental mission, which will be presented in a form of a very much live set, but only after he goes around in the city – as usual – to collect any quasi instrument, which he incorporates into his set up, literally playing the city's noises. San Francisco's Bay Area lends us its Monophonics, whom will also perform at this year's Budapest Essentials.

All in all, as the line up (this addition follows: La Roux, Solomun, Katy B, Sub Focus, Carl Craig, Dope D.O.D., Gold Panda) is continuously growing, it is clear, that Budapest Essentials will show everyone how entertaining and open the Hungarian capital is.

Until June 19, advance day tickets are available for 9 9000 HUF, while passes can be purchased for 14 990 HUF at the festival's fresh and crispy website:
